

The coffee app grew up this month.

It went from a working prototype to something built around Capture This. Your data is permanent, signing in takes one tap, and the whole thing got simpler — we deleted more code than we added, and it got better.

01

Your data is permanent

Clients, crew, productions, orders — everything lives in a real cloud database. Add someone on your laptop, they're on your phone on set. A dead phone loses nothing.

02

Sign in with Google

One tap with your Google account. No passwords to remember, reset, or write on a call sheet.

03

Everything runs from a phone

The laptop print station is gone. Prep, the live drink board, and label export all happen on a phone — and runners just get a link, no account needed.

04

Branded for Capture This

Your smiley is on the cup labels, with multiple styles designed for the holographic silver stock. The cups are part of the brand now, not just logistics.

05

The live board got bolder

Redesigned for a runner walking a set with one hand free — faster to read, faster to tap.

06

Simpler everywhere

Fewer screens, tighter flows, less to explain. The home screen is now three doors: prep, run the shoot, print labels.

WHAT'S NEXT

Design polish

Tightening type, spacing, and visual consistency across every screen.

Live sync

Multiple phones on set seeing order updates in real time.

Easier runner links

Smoother setup for sending shoot-day links to runners.

